

CAMP FRED FUNSTON A MODEL ARMY CAMP

7,000 Workmen Build Cantonment in Four Months—
Nearly Completed.

COVERS 640 ACRES

90,000 Soldiers Can Be Accommodated When Barracks Are Finished.

Camp Fred Funston at Fort Riley, Kan., where Boone County's quota for the National Army will be trained, is a model city in plan and reality, although it was started only four months ago. It is now nearing completion.

The government has 7,000 workmen in the camp, building barracks, laying water and sewer pipes, installing the lighting system and paving the streets. Officers expect the camp to accommodate 90,000 men. About 3,000 men were in camp up to the coming of the last increment of 40 per cent. Visitors to the camp say the fourteen Columbia men, who have been there two weeks, are in fine spirits.

The Union Pacific Railroad runs through the center of the camp, supplying it with all building materials, food and equipment for the soldiers and with the men who will be made into soldiers. The camp covers about 640 acres on the United States reservation of 40,000 acres. The streets are straight and wide and run at right angles in both directions. The depots of the quartermaster's department are built beside the railroad and then, on both sides of the railroad, are the barracks for the men.

The barracks run parallel with the streets and have alleys in between. Each barrack is about 40 feet wide and 120 feet long and two stories high. These are for the drafted men. The quarters of the officers assigned to the men in any one barrack are beside this building, only much smaller and one story high. About 200 men are housed in each barrack, each house having its own dining room and cooks as well as officers.

Each of the barracks is modern, being equipped with electric lights, water, sewer and heating systems. All of the buildings are of wood and none is plastered, but the barracks are lined with plaster board.

Camp Funston and Fort Riley are separate camps about three and a half miles from each other. Fort Riley is solely for the officers and for the men of the regular army, while Camp Funston is only for the drafted men. Both camps are, however, on the same reservation.

The streets in between the barracks are wide enough for ordinary drilling. Then men drill eight hours a day and start as soon as they arrive. The fourteen men who composed Boone County's 5 per cent began drilling the day they arrived.

CO-OP MAKES BIG PEN ORDER

Purchase of University Store Is Largest from Retailers.

The Co-Operative Store sold on the average of one Conklin fountain pen to every four students enrolled in the University last year. The total sale amounted to almost 1,000.

The University Co-Operative Store recently sent in the largest order for fountain pens the Conklin Pen Company has ever received from a retailer, according to word from the company officials. Alfonso Johnson, manager of the Co-Op, says that intensive advertising produced the sales.—Missourian.
